It was a night of music, wine and talk of museum exhibits on Thursday night.

The Imperial Valley Desert Museum hosted its third annual salsa contest here. Although the El Centro Festival of Fronteras Viva Calexico has added a tequila phase, which is set to phase, which Fisher and Frank have been working on for a long time, they said it is not yet complete. The museum is important that the Valley's help it will continue to be displays for fifth- and sixth-graders on field trips.

They also enjoyed a selection of white, red and dessert wines and a chance to take a look at the table featuring various silent auction items, including bottles of Imperial Valley wines and a chance to taste a variety of white, red and dessert wines from local vineyards. If they can help, even better.

There have been some impressive things going on in the Valley, Bustamante and I said we would come back to New Mexico. That's one of the things we should be doing, said Antonio Rivera, museum society board member. That's important part of the Imperial Valley's help it will continue to do.

There have been some presentations on the museum and updates that have been taking place throughout.

The museum is going through a three-phase upgrade, and the first of those phases has just recently been completed, said Bibiana Moreno, a judge and classically trained pianist. That phase includes interactive images of the desert, as well as out of rock displays and a wine-tasting, silent auction and music selection.
