The recent birthday of Cesar Chavez has inspired me to speak out about the injustice I have witnessed in the agricultural industry. As a farm worker, I understand the struggles that workers face on a daily basis. The low wages, long hours, and poor working conditions are unacceptable.

In addition, the use of chemicals and pesticides on the fields is not only harmful to the workers but also to the environment. These chemicals contaminate the soil and water, affecting the health of the workers and the local communities.

I want to take a page from Cesar Chavez's playbook and organize a strike. Congress may have been slow to respond to his demands, but I will do better than writing to them. I will organize a strike of my fellow workers, and I will not stop until we receive the justice we deserve.
